

Abbie was a fairy princess, with super-duper sparkly purple wings and the pinkest, glitteriest dress ever made. She was walking through the sunny forest with Mary. Mary was her pet unicorn. Mary had a horn that looked just like an upside-down ice cream cone! “It’s a sun-sational day, Mary!” Abbie giggled, kicking leaves.

Abbie loved telling jokes.

“Hey Mary, What do you call a fairy that hasn’t taken a bath?” Mary just chewed some grass.

“Stinkerbell!”

Abbie laughed so hard at her own joke she accidentally did a tiny, sparkly fairy fart, pfffft, but Mary was unimpressed and just rolled her eyes.

Suddenly, they stopped walking. Right in the middle of the trees was a very weird house. It looked exactly like it was built out of giant Lego bricks! There were red ones, blue ones, and yellow ones all snapped together. “Wow!” said Abbie. “That house looks like it was built by a giant toddler.”

“You’d better wait out here, Mary. I’ll just have a little look and be right back,” Abbie said. She tiptoed up to the front door.

She went to knock but it opened on it's own with a loud CREAK!

Inside was a very long, very colorful hallway with lots of doors.

The hallway was rainbow-colored and went on forever. “This hallway is longer than a giraffe’s neck!” Abbie giggled.

She skipped to the very first door. It was bouncy and made of soft rubber.

“Hmm, this door looks fun,” she said. She yanked it open.
